"Wings of the Imagination: Why We Need Birds"

Why is it that some birds of daylight sing their most glorious songs at night? How can a bird build an intricate, detailed nest, and then use it for only one season? Why can we find birds thriving both in verdant jungles and in the most desolate landscapes? What can we learn from the ability of birds to adapt to changes in their surroundings?

Drawing on a lifetime of experiences from Africa to the Antarctic to American back yards, Kenn Kaufman explores the mysteries of bird life and the ways that they can add to our understanding of our place in the world.

In this richly illustrated talk, he suggests that our encounters with birds not only increase our sense of wonder but also can increase our ability to communicate with our fellow humans.
